

Boost Your Social Security Disability Claim with Government Funded Medical Care

While it is possible for somebody who is not yet 50 years of age to obtain Social security disability benefits, it is quite a bit more complicated than for somebody who is over 50 years of age. The burden of proof for a younger individual is that there is no work in the national economy that he/she can do. For an older individual, they typically only have to prove that they can no longer do the work that they did in the past 15 years. If you do not have medical insurance, Social Security will send you to their doctors. Their doctors are not there to help you but to evaluate your case in a quick and methodical fashion. The best way to prove your case is to get treatment with your own doctors. These are physicians with real knowledge of your case and experience with your disability.

If, however, you have no access to medical insurance, you have two different options for obtaining care. Your local county clinic and vocational rehabilitation. County clinics are there for people who do not have medical insurance. If you decide to use a county clinic, the best way to go about it is quietly: it is best not to tell them about your current disabilities. Often times, when the administrative staff hears about your complicated medical problems, they will tell you that they cannot help you because they do not have proper funding for your condition(s). When they hear of the depth of your disability, they may turn you away without letting you see even one doctor. Instead of providing a long medical history, when you speak to a county clinic, simply state that you are a person without medical insurance who needs to see a primary physician. Say nothing else. Then, when you get in to see the doctor, you can provide details about your condition and concerns. Often (though not always), once you get in to see a doctor, the county clinic will send you to any necessary specialists and agree to pay.

The Vocational Rehabilitation Program, is a state funded program designed to help people be trained to do some type of work. However, before sending you off for training, this program will check your medical history and have you checked out by doctors associated with the program. And if they feel it is needed, vocational programs may pay for visits to specialists and physicians, medicine, or even surgery on your behalf. At the end, they will make a determination as to whether they feel you can or cannot work. If at the end of the decision process the program determines you are unable to work, they will then send you over to Social Security to apply for benefits. This can help your claim, because the experts in the field of getting you back to work say you cannot. At the same time, you have gotten medical treatment and medications for free. And, if a vocational rehabilitation program does decide that you are fit to work, they will help you find the employment you need. The records from the doctors that vocational rehabilitation sent you to can also be used as evidence in support of your claim for disability benefits.

Once again, without medical treatment, especially for younger individuals, it is almost impossible to get Social Security Disability Benefits. Therefore, you have to get into medical treatment as soon as possible.
